

How do I get access to an article?

also available as video tutorial

A) Full text included in database

1. In some databases, e.g. WISO and partly in EBSCO databases, the full text is directly included and can usually be retrieved as PDF or HTML document.

B) No full text directly included, but SFX available

In many databases, only the reference to articles is included, but the full text is not.

Example:

However, you can use SFX to check the availability of the item or order the item as an interlibrary loan copy.

To do so, click the button.

- If online access is available, this click will take you to the relevant full text.
- If there is no online access to this full text in Ansbach, an ordering option is offered. Click on „Get it! A service provided by Bavarian Library Network“.

C) Neither full text provided directly, nor SFX but bibliographic information available that comes from another source, e.g. from a bibliography

auch als
Videoanleitung
verfügbar

1. If you search a database that does not include free full texts, you will usually find detailed information about the author of the article, the title, which journal published it, the year and the corresponding page(s).

Example:

The screenshot shows a journal article entry. On the left is a small image of a film set. The title is 'Melodramatic animation, presence and sympathy for crime victims in news: An experiment with adolescents in Hong Kong'. Below the title, the authors are listed: 'Wai Han, Lo' and 'Benjamin Ka Lun, Cheng'. The source is 'Journal of Applied Journalism & Media Studies, Volume 10, Number 1, 1 April 2021, pp. 73-94(22)'. The publisher is 'Intellect' and the DOI is 'https://doi.org/10.1386/ajms_00028_1'. On the right, there is a 'Buy Article' section with a price of '$14.00 + tax' and buttons for 'ADD TO CART' and 'BUY NOW'.

2. At first, check to see if the article is accessible in print or in electronic form through the university library.

This is done by searching the catalog for the title of the journal or the ISSN of the journal (but not the title of the article):

3. If the university library owns this journal in printed or electronic form, you will find information in the catalog where to find the journal in the library (shelfmark) or a link to the full text (some electronic journals might only be accessible in the university network). Otherwise you won't get a hit in the Ansbach catalog:

Search Entries

- Did you enter your search terms in the right search field?
- Did you truncate your search terms? Using the truncation symbol "*" you can replace any number of characters with the truncation symbol ' exactly 1 character.
- Check your search terms and their spelling.

4. If the journal is not available in Ansbach, as in our example, switch to the "Bavarian Library Union" tab.

If too many hits are displayed there, you can switch back to the search mask and restrict the search there to "newspapers and journals" below the search fields. When searching, it can also be helpful to enter the title in quotation marks, i.e. „Journal of Applied Journalism & Media Studies“ in our example – by entering the title in quotation marks, the search will look for exactly this sequence of words and thus reduce the number of hits.
